Dull and languid, have a poor appetite and there is a lack of assimilation of food, it is an indication that the system is weakened, and rendered liable to contract serious disease. The blood needs purifying, and the general system requires a building up by the best of all Spring tonics Brown's Sarsaparilla.

KEENE, N. H., May 20th, 1889.

Brown's Sarsaparilla is a good medicine. I know this as it has been in the house of my folks, and it is pronounced by them to be the best of all the Sarsaparillas for the blood, and will work wonders after others have failed, and were I to speak of any medicine for the blood I would take that in preference to all others for the blood, kidneys, liver and stomach.

Dull and Languid

In the latter part of the winter and spring of 1885, I felt I didn't know how; no life; no ambition, no strength, no energy, no appetite worth naming, and no relish for what little I did eat. I bought a bottle of Brown's Sarsaparilla. It seemed to do no good until nearly gone, when a tremendous itching of my feet and legs commenced; I continued till I had used six bottles; my appetite returned, my food tasted natural, and I, though now 63 years of age, feel as well and lively as I have for twenty years. I cannot speak too highly of Brown's Sarsaparilla.

Yours truly,
BENJAMIN HITE,
York Corner, Me.

Build Up the

A very strong case showing what Brown's Sarsaparilla will do for the children is that of the little daughter of Don A. H. Powers, Esq., of Houlton, Maine, brother of ex-Congressman Powers, and one of the leading lawyers of Aroostook county. His little five year old girl had been in delicate health, pale and with little appetite, for some time. Mr. Powers had never tried any patent medicines, and had little faith in them, but so numerous and strong were the words of commendation that came to him from neighbors and through the press, that he was induced to try a bottle of Brown's Sarsaparilla for the little one. This was used according to directions, and a second one purchased. What was the result? Mr. Powers says the variable appetite gave way to a natural and hearty desire for food, increased vigor and vivacity were noticeable, glowing cheeks and bright eyes took the places of the pallid face and sallow look, and the hearts of the parents were gladdened beyond expression by the wonderful change which had taken place in their darling.

System with

Annie E. Blodgett of Lisbon, N. H., writes: My husband and my niece have both taken Brown's Sarsaparilla by my advice, and we would not be without a bottle of it in the house. It has relieved me of many pains which I have suffered from for years. I have great faith in your medicine and wish I could commend it personally to all who are suffering from the many complaints of women caused by poor blood.

Life is a Game of Cards.

Life is but a game of cards, which each one has to learn,
Each shuffles, cuts and deals a pack, and each a trump doth turn.
Some turn a high card at the top, while others turn a low,
Some hold a hand quite full of trumps, while others none can show.
Some shuffle with a practiced hand and pack their cards with care,
In this, they know when they have all the aces and the leaders are
Thus fools are made the dupes of rogues, and rogues each other cheat,
But he is very wise indeed who never meets defeat.
In playing, some lead the ace, their counting card to save,
Some play the deuce and some the tray, and many play the knave,
Some play for money and some for fun, and more for worldly fame,
And not until the game's played out can they count up their gain.
When hearts are trump we play for love, then pleasure looks the hour:
No thought of sorrow checks our joy, in those bounteous hours
We dance and sing, sweet music make, our cards at random pass,
And while the hearts remain on top, our game is but a holiday.
When diamonds chance to crown the top, then players stake their gold,
And heavy sums are won and lost by gamblers young and old.
Intent on winning, each doth watch his card with eager eye,
So he may watch his neighbor's hand and cheat him on the sly.
When clubs are trump look out for war, on ocean and on land,
For bloody deeds are often done when clubs are in the hand.
Then lives are staked instead of gold, the days are worn out bread,
Across the broad Atlantic now, see clubs have got the lead.
And last of all when the spade is turned by hand of time,
And always closes up the game in every land and every clime,
No matter how much a man may win or how much a man may save,
You'll find the spade turns up at last and digs the player's grave.

VENDETTA,

OR

THE STORY OF ONE FORGOTTEN.

BY MARIE CORELLI.

PREFACE.

Lest those who read the following pages should deem this story at all improbable, it is perhaps necessary to say that its chief incidents are founded on an actual occurrence which took place in Naples during the last scathing visitation of the cholera in 1884. We know well enough, by the chronicle of daily journalism, that the infidelity of wives is most unhappily, becoming common—far too common for the peace and good repute of society. Not so common is an outraged husband's vengeance not often dares he take the law into his own hands—for in England, at least, such boldness on his part would doubtless be deemed a worse crime than that by which he, personally, is doomed to suffer. But in Italy things are on a different footing—the verbosity and red tape of the law, and the hesitating verdict of special juries, are not there considered sufficiently efficacious to soothe a man's damaged honor and ruined name. And thus—whether right or wrong—it often happens that strange and awful deeds are perpetrated—deeds of which the world in general hears nothing, and which when brought to light as last, are received with surprise and incredulity. Yet the romances planned by the brain of the novelist or dramatist are poor in comparison with the romances of real life. life wrongly termed commonplace, but which, in fact, teems with tragedies as great and dark and soul torturing as any devised by Sophocles or Shakespeare. Nothing is more strange than truth—nothing at times more terrible.

MARIE CORELLI.

CHAPTER I.

WHO write this, am a dead man. Dead legally—dead by absolute proofs—dead and buried! Ask for me in my native city and they will tell you I was one of the victims of the cholera that ravaged Naples in 1884, and that my mortal remains lie mouldering in the funeral vault of my ancestors. Yet . . . I live! I feel the warm blood coursing through my veins—the blood of thirty summers—the prime of early manhood invigorates me, and makes these eyes of mine keen and bright—these muscles strong as iron—this hand powerful of grip—this well-knit form erect and proud of bearing. Yes! . . . I am alive, though declared to be dead; although the fulness of many forces and even sorrow has left few distinguishing marks upon me, save one. My hair, once ebony black, is white as a wreath of Alpine snow, though its clustering curls are thick as ever.

Wellsboro Gazette.

THURSDAY, APRIL 30, 1891.

FRED'K. WRIGHT, - - FRANK GONEVERY,
Editors and Proprietors.

TIOGA and Lycoming counties are put together by the latest Senatorial apportionment bill as the Twenty-fifth district.

SINCE the advent of the Italians, Poles and Huns in the coal regions, murders are of almost daily occurrence. This is a noble exemplification of how a high tariff "protects" the people.

GRANGER TAGGART declares that unless the Senate passes the Taggart Revenue bill in its present form the Legislature shall not adjourn until June 17, the maximum term of 150 days.

GOVERNOR PATTISON has vetoed the bill for the creation and distribution of a fund for aged and disabled policemen in cities of the second class. The House sustained the veto by a vote of 114 to 31.

THE McKINLEY tariff bars are again to be taken down. This time it is to be free trade with Spain as regards the Cuban trade. Strange, isn't it, that this trade cannot be secured by enforcing the McKinley tariff?

A RECENT protection "tariff picture" shows that the wages of jewelers in protectionist Germany are only 90 cents a day, while in free trade England they amount to $1.50. It is hard to understand how this can be used as a "picture"

SPECIAL TAX BURDENS.

The Payment of Taxes by Railroads and Other Corporations.

The report of the Committee of Ways and Means of the Pennsylvania State Senate, which was composed of Senators Brown, L. Thomas, A. L. Taggart and James H. McSparran, on the pending Tax bill, is filled with interesting statistics. In referring to Tioga county the committee says: "Ex Auditor-General Niles has shown this very sharply in the instance which he cites of the Pine Creek railroad in Tioga county: This railroad cost $4,584,000 and has a mortgage indebtedness of $3,900,000. On account of this the capital stock face value is $1,000,000; it is appraised at $100,000; the indebtedness being deducted; a privilege which the law refuses to real estate encumbered with mortgages or judgments. Upon this they pay a tax of 8 mills for State purposes only. This railroad earned in 1889, $723,382 80; the total expenses of running it amounted to $478,933 18, a profit of $249,403.62, or nearly 5 per cent on the total cost. And yet it paid but a paltry sum, $300, to the State and nothing at all to the districts through which its 75 miles of railroad runs. Take the Corning, Cowanesque and Antrim railroad:

It cost to build and equip	$3,250,000
It cost to run it in 1888	750,000
It earned in 1889	925,000
It paid clear profit to stockholders	175,000

"It pays about $300 yearly tax on gross earnings and capital stock into the Pennsylvania State treasury, nothing to the townships or the county of Tioga, whence all its business and through which 37½ of its 53 miles run. But 15½ miles of it passes through New York. It crosses the State line and passes through three townships: Lindley, Erwin and Corning in New York State. It pays to these townships, for local purposes, their roads, schools and poor, $1 691, $875 and $1,552 respectively, or a sum total of $4,183. Is it not evident that we must secure a revision of the State laws of Pennsylvania, that this revision shall be in the interest

And the [illegible] is told of Pennsylvania every year and [illegible] year.

GOSSIP FROM GOTHAM.

Points and Observations on the Events of the Week.

NEW YORK, April 27.—And still they come! The great stream of immigration is increasing with startling rapidity. For the week ending Sunday night 17,824 steerage passengers were landed at this port. This was the largest number for any week in the past five years. Statistics show that the present stream of immigrants belong to the most wretched classes of the Old World, thousands of them being without baggage, filthy, and, beyond a few dollars for immediate need, absolutely dependent. The law is already stringent in excluding those who are likely to become a public charge—the idiots and insane, the persons afflicted with contagious diseases, convicts and contract laborers, but there is surely one species of immigrants now pouring upon our shores who threaten to create new economic conditions and require an overhauling of some of the statutes that are intended to regulate the well being of society. Moreover, there are excellent reasons for supposing that the immigration of the future will be of a lower grade than that of the past, and that the present evils are only a hint of what we shall encounter if a more rigid self-protecting policy is not enforced.

At last a move is made towards erecting a monument to the memory of Gen. Grant. Today was the sixty-ninth anniversary of the General's birth and the day was observed by breaking ground in Riverside Park [illegible]

[illegible] Cable Brings of Interest to Various Readers.

LONDON, April 27.—All Germany is mourning for Count von Moltke, who died [illegible] night in his [illegible]. The Vossische Zeitung, who was at Wartburg, was [illegible] informed of the veteran Field Marshal's death, and telegraphed expressions of sympathy to the family of the dead soldier. In his telegram of condolence the Emperor said that Germany, in the death of Field Marshal von Moltke, had met a loss greater than would be that of even an entire army.

The remains of the Count lay in state on Sunday and were viewed by great crowds from noon until 5 p. m. The bier, which is placed in the ballroom of the staff building, is draped with white silk, embroidered with silver, and a coverlet designed by the deceased man for the purpose covers the body as far as the breast. The remains have been embalmed by Dr. Beuster. The Emperor has ordered the army to go into mourning for eighty days.

Emperor William, in his order instructing the army to go into mourning, says: "A friend and councillor has been removed from my side. I most deeply mourn his irreparable loss to myself, to the army, and to the fatherland. To his last hour the deceased enjoyed unprecedented renown by means of his military achievements and his services for the welfare of the fatherland, whose gratitude will never die."

'Long in Sugar-makin' Time.

River, feller has some moments that his feelin's likes the best,
Maybe Summer, maybe Winter, that he thinks I like all the—
But the days that make my droopin' spirits just get up and chime
Are the dyin' days uv Winter, 'long in sugar-makin' time.

Then the little birds is singin', tunin' up their little throats,
Thinkin' uv the comin' harvest, uv the corn and wheat and oats,
An' the lingerin' uv the sheep bells with the ringin'-ow bell chime,
In the dyin' days uv Winter, 'long in sugar-makin' time.

Then the little lambs are playin' an a capern around,
An' the first blue Jonnny jump-ups are a-peepin' through the ground,
An' the thawed-out branch flows happy, kinder singin' in a rhyme,
In the dyin' days of Winter, 'long in sugar-makin' time.

Everything both dead and livin', lovin' the earth an' sky above,
Seems so smilin' an' so pleasin' as it all had fell to love;
So, for me, this side uv heaven there can't be any—
Finer time
Than the dyin' days uv Winter, 'long in sugar-makin' time.

THE SHADOW OF A SIN.

The moonlight touched in lighting crimson on the shimmering waters of the pretty river over the dainty boat floating slowly down stream and cast a faint tinge of pink on the pale, colorless face of the woman in the boat, with a heap of snowy water lilies at her feet, one slim white hand trailing over the glistening water as the boat glided along. Alma Dane might live for years, but she would never again view such a perfect scene, or feel within her heart that strange, sweet peace.

Dr. Cameron laid down the oars at length, and let the boat float down the stream, his dark, earnest eyes fixed upon the pale face of the woman before him.

"We can never forget it, can we, Miss Dane?" he asked at length.

She started, and was it the last rays of crimson sunlight, or did she blush at sound of his voice and the deep eyes fixed upon her with such eager intensity?

"No, I shall never forget," she said softly, and the gray eyes drooped from before his eager, passionate gaze, and the white hand in the water trembled a little. "I was thinking of Undine," she added irrelevantly.

He smiled—it was wonderful how that smile, rare and sweet, lighted up the man's grave, dark face. It was like a burst of sudden sunshine through a bank of gloom, dark, storm clouds.

"Poor Undine!" he sighed; "in finding her soul she found a doubtful blessing. She would have been better off without it."

Miss Dane's big gray eyes met Mark Cameron's eager gaze, and they drooped shyly once more.

"Heresy!" she cried lightly, shaking the water from her little white hand, and drying it upon a lace trimmed cobweb of a handkerchief.

His eyes were upon her with such a deep, intent expression that she found herself trembling under it.

"Alma!"—his voice shook a little in spite of his efforts to be calm—"this is our last boat ride together, I suppose, for I go to-morrow."

"To-morrow! Oh, Mark!"

That name his given name clipped from her tongue quite unawares. So often had she called him by it in her thoughts that she spoke it now and did not know it.

"Yes, to-morrow," gravely; "it must be. Oh, Alma, if you knew all! Listen, I have a story to tell you my friend. You are my friend, are you not? True, it is only three months since we first met, but somehow I think I must have known you in another world a state of pre-existence. When I first laid my eyes upon you at the church festival in the town yonder—my heart gave a sudden leap. I recognized you—do not smile, Alma, and I said to myself, 'The one fair woman under the sun for me.' And yet, Alma, I cannot ask you the question that lingers upon my tongue, because there is a reason—a good reason, Alma, look me in the eyes and say, 'May heaven help you, Mark!'"

She glanced into his face and faltered forth the words that he had spoken. Tears were in his eyes, the red lip quivered. What was it that stood between these two? Something—the black shadow of an awful wrong!

Dr. Cameron bent his stately head, and as he plied the oars once more softly, homeward bound, he went on speaking in a low, gentle voice.

"Miss Dane, answer me this question. Suppose that you loved a man—loved him with all your heart and soul, and had promised to be his wife. And then—then—the clouds of black disgrace fall suddenly and unexpectedly upon him and obscure his good name. He is accused of a crime, and only the lack of reliable evidence against him prevents his punishment—imprisonment for years in a felon's cell—for the crime of forgery. What would you do in such a case?—you who surely ought to know that the man you love is innocent, but wrongfully accused by some secret enemy. Would you give him up, and when the world turned its back upon him turn away from his foe?"
